In response, Ackman wrote in 2017 that he would be "offered a chance to take over the running of the firm for at least one more year," which he said gave him enough time to sell his stake in Mapbox.

Jeffrey Woolfson, a former SBI partner, who also worked with Ackman, had been involved in the development of the company's technology platform.

According to the complaint, Ackman's plan was to sell the company's technology to companies that would use it as a platform for their own products.

The SEC sought an injunction against Ackman and the other defendants, and the defendants agreed to settle the charges without admitting or denying the allegations.

In October 2018, Ackman announced that he was stepping down as CEO of Pershing Square, which he had founded in 1992.

He said he was stepping down because he wanted to focus on his philanthropic work.

He had previously announced that he would be stepping down from Pershing Square in September 2017, but had remained as chairman of the company.
