Haleys lucrative path after U.N. stint

GOP presidential hopeful raked in millions from speeches and consulting

by Isaac Stanley-Becker

Nicole Haley was representing the United States on the world stage, as President Donald Trump's ambassador to the United Nations. Yet a year later, she is an unemployed woman hoping for a job as a state attorney in her native South Carolina.

Haley was the most visible member of a White House team that helped prepare Trump for his first meeting with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un. As an assistant secretary of state, she helped develop the strategy for the summit and advised the president on how to manage the situation.

She was a star of the U.S. mission to the United Nation's Security Council, where she was the designated U.S. representative to 15 international delegations. She was also a member of the president's National Security Council, the National Economic Council, the National Space Council, the National Security Commission on Artificial Intelligence, and the National Economic Council.