In her Fire Island neighborhood in the Santa Cruz Mountains, where internet and cell service are available, power outages are frequent and a multitude sometimes occur, not having a landline would be “very scary,” said 56-year-old Jamie Duschek.

Most of Bay Area would lose service that has no “valid public purpose,” company says, but some people say losing the old-school phones would be “life threatening”.

By Elliot Daren
darren@bayareanewsgroup.com

---

ATT& looks to pull the plug

A proposed by telecom

---

POSSIBLE LOSS OF LANDLINES

---

ANGRY PG&E customers tired of being left in the dark

Some residents say more preparation was needed ahead of storm

By Nathaniel Bridgers

His and hers

---

Super Bowl LVIII

San Francisco 49ers vs Kansas City Chiefs

Serving up history, some trivia and the game

BY PAUL ROGERS

---

ATT WITHDRAWING LANDLINE SERVICE

---

A LOOK AT SUPER BOWL HISTORY

---

ATTER PASSING 300 MILLION YARDS

---

PULL THE PLUG

---

Tougher pollution rules on horizon

Much of Bay Area likely out of compliance with EPA’s targets regarding soot, other particles

By Julia Prodis Sulek and Scooty Nickerson

---

Super Bowl LVI

2024

---

By Julia Prodis Sulek and Scooty Nickerson